Reason 1: He Is All-Caring

"Is it necessary to have an explanation of why God wants us to do the things asked of us? There are a zillion reasons why "Because I said so" from Almighty God is good enough. Since I can't count to a zillion, let me list five.

"It seems plausible as a mother, that because I am the one who carefully carried the fetus within my womb for nine very interesting and nauseating months, because I am the one who went through birthing contractions that felt like a hyperactive porcupine had been released in my lower back in order to bring the helpless infant from a world filled with darkness into bright fluorescent light...because I retrieved LEGO bricks from the toddler's mouth, because I rocked away monsters in the middle of the night - somehow it only seems fair that the same child needs only, "Because I said so".

"How much more should I accept as final the authority of the God who carefully created me, who knew me before I was in the womb (Psalm 139:13), who endured the sting of thorns and the merciless blows of sharp bone-laced lashes, who in the form of His only Son, at last laid down His innocent life for me, all to bring me out of darkness into His marvelous light? (1 Peter 2:9). He keeps constant count of the hairs on my head (Matthew 10:30), He knows what I'm about to ask for before I utter a word, and His very presence dispels monsters in the night. It qualifies Him to say, "Because I said so." "
